

Praise from bloggers for Women, Power and Politics
One of the most comprehensive online sources of women's political participation worldwide
www.imow.org/wpp

"A few minutes visiting/participating in this fabulous undertaking will definitely feed your soul."
—Feminist Peace Network: <http://www.feministpeacenet.org>

"I tried to pick a favorite section, but I just don't have one. Truth is, every time I started to venture into a new area, I'd get lost for hours on end just following all the links."
—The Feminist Review: <http://feministreview.blogspot.com>

"I am unbelievably excited to tell you about the International Museum of Women. ...They've essentially created exhibits for the 21st century, accessible and open to everyone around the world 24 hours a day...via the web."
—Jessica Knows: <http://jessicaknows.com>

"So spend some time at the International Museum of Women. It's inspiring and we need to be inspired right now." —Women's Space: <http://www.womensspace.org>

"I can't stress the depth of possibilities of education within this site and it is most definitely worth your frequent revisiting this weekend and beyond. There is a plethora of prolific writing, reporting, and interviewing available on this site and, as a new visitor, look forward to digging up the museum's deepest treasures. Not your usual musky-scented, quiet museum space, eh?"
—Feminist Response to Pop Culture blog: <http://bitchmagazine.org/blogs>

"Not only that, but when they say international, they mean international. There are not just token articles but a real engagement with women worldwide.... There's a toolkit so you can take action yourself and also a list of pieces by community voices. It's simply amazing. Have a look. —Zero at the Bone:
<http://zeroatthebone.wordpress.com>

"Right now, the site is hosting an exhibit called Women, Power and Politics that is broad and multi-faceted and breathtakingly impressive. Investigations of women's roles in the environmental movement, religion, democracy and more are explored through fascinating videos and beautifully composed articles."
—Already Pretty: <http://www.alreadypretty.com>

"Incredibly informative and diverse. Rather than focusing majorly on obvious and U.S.-centeric examples such as the campaigns of Hillary Clinton and Sarah Palin, the exhibit seems to give equal time and energy to the experiences of women all over the world, and how they have made a difference in their own countries/regions."
—Regions Blog: <http://www.almadinnah.com>

"Women, Power and Politics—a good combination and a great online exhibit."
—Pundit Mom: <http://punditmom1.blogspot.com>